A True Incident Of The Civil War.

In 1865 a Potomac river steamboat was carrying a party of excursionists. Among the passengers was a man who, surrounded by a party of friends on one side of the steamer, was singing a hymn. When he had concluded he was approached by a man who had been attracted by the song and who inquired of the singer if he had served in Virginia during the civil war. He replied that he had; that he was under Grant and was in Virginia at the time mentioned by the inquiring stranger. "Then," said the stranger, "I heard you sing this hymn before. I was enlisted in the southern army and on a certain night was instructed by my officer to shoot the Federal Sentinel stationed at a certain post, so that a night attack might be made. I crept up into the bushes within a few feet of the sentry as he was pacing back and forth. I heard him singing in a low tone. My rifle was pointed at his heart but my curiosity prompted me to listen and if possible catch his words. I paused and as he drew nearer I caught the words: 'Cover my defenseless head with the shadow of thy wing.' My rifle dropped by my side and I could not shoot, and your life was saved." "Oh," said he, "I remember the night well. I went out into the darkness feeling that this was my last night on earth. My mind finally reverted to the little old home church and I began humming in a low tone this hymn which was my favorite. I did not imagine that I sang loud enough for any one even a few rods away to hear me. I remember however, the quiet peace which came over me after I finished the hymn, but I never knew until this hour that my life had been saved by the prayer of my heart as it went up in song from my lips on that eventful night.

A Good Thing.

In response to an inquiry Superintendent of Turnpikes L. P. Spurr, in Fayette, says that to date he has had 46 5-8 miles of turnpike oiled at a cost of $135 per mile. It would certainly be a good thing for Paris if Pleasant and High and the cross streets were oiled. It could be done at very small cost.
